Description this book

Kill the Gringo is the extraordinary, untold story of Jack Hood Vaughn, whose career in diplomacy, social advocacy and conservation spanned more than 25 years and 11 countries. A passionate leader during his college years, Jack joined the Marines in 1941, fighting in the battles of Guadalcanal and Okinawa during World War II. His rapport with people and ability with language led to a specialty role in international development in Latin America and Africa where he drew the attention of Vice President Lyndon Johnson during his visit to Senegal in 1961. Three years later, President Johnson appointed Jack ambassador to Panama when violent anti-American riots there led to a severing of diplomatic ties. As the second director of the Peace Corps, Jack presided over the largest number of volunteers in the organization's history and the delicate handling of anti-Vietnam fervor among its ranks. After his foreign service career, Jack led the National Urban Coalition and Planned Parenthood during the turbulent late 1960's and early 1970's. A rural development job in Iran ended dramatically with the 1979 revolution, and Jack turned his back to the environment, initiating the Nature Conservancy and founding Conservation International in 1987.
